

Informal vs. Formal Resignation Letter: Discover your Fit

A job resignation letter is a formal document that informs your employer of your decision to leave your current position. It is often called a written record of your intention to resign conveyed to your superior.

Resignation letters are usually of two types – Formal & Informal. Formal is generally used for traditional, corporate, or high-level roles, where professionalism & documentation are important. However, informal is suitable for casual workplaces, close relationships, or shorter-term positions where a relaxed approach is appropriate.

Choosing between a formal & informal resignation letter depends on several factors, including your company's culture, the nature of your relationship with your employer, & the industry standards. This blog will take you through both types in detail, explaining the features of & the appropriate occasion to use each of them. Let us dive deeper into it.

Type 1 - Formal Resignation Letter

Key Features:

- Clear Intent – A formal resignation ensures that a clear notice is provided to your employer by explicitly stating the reason for the resignation with the effective date for the same. This helps the employer to carry on with the necessary formalities of your departure & make necessary arrangements for your replacement or redistribution of your duties.

- Professional Tone - Using a professional tone means employing formal language & adhering to a respectful & courteous manner throughout the letter. This professionalism holds your reputation & aligns with the expectations of a formal workplace.
- Expression of Gratitude – Instead of remembering the bad experience you had with the company, acknowledging & appreciating the opportunities, support, & experiences you had during your employment will help you to end your relationship with the company on a positive note. This will also leave a good impression for any future career prospects with the company or the clients.
- Transition Assistance - Offering transition assistance means showing your willingness to help make the process of your departure as smooth as possible for your employer. This helps ensure that your responsibilities are transferred smoothly to your replacement or colleagues & demonstrates your commitment to your role.

When appropriate:

- Corporate or Traditional Work Environments: In industries or companies with a more formal culture, a formal resignation letter is expected. It ensures professionalism & adherence to organizational norms.
- Contractual or Legal Obligations: If your employment contract specifies formal resignation procedures or notice periods, a formal letter meets these requirements.
- Maintaining Professional Relationships: A formal resignation letter helps preserve a positive relationship with your employer & colleagues, especially if you may need references or networking opportunities in the future.
- Documenting the Transition: For clarity & record-keeping, a formal resignation letter provides a written record of your departure details, including the effective date & your offer to assist with the transition.

Type 2 – Informal Resignation Letter

Key Features:

- Simple Notification – An informal resignation letter helps to provide a simple notification of your wish to resign & your last working day.
- Casual Tone - Using a casual tone means adopting a friendly, relaxed style of communication rather than formal or rigid language. This fits better in workplaces with a relaxed or informal culture, where a formal tone might feel out of place.
- Brief Gratitude – Even if it is an informal tone, do not forget to thank your manager for their assistance. This helps to keep the focus on your departure while still recognizing the positive aspects of your employment.
- Direct Communication - Informal resignation letter provides you with a chance to address your resignation in person or over the phone before sending the written notice. It allows for good communication, immediate discussion of your reasons for leaving & any questions or concerns your manager might have. Also, it helps in maintaining a positive relationship by showing that you are taking the time to communicate personally.

When appropriate:

- Casual Work Environments: In workplaces with a more relaxed or informal culture, an informal resignation may be appropriate. This could be a small business or a start-up where formalities are less emphasized.
- Close Relationships: If you have a close, personal relationship with your manager or colleagues, an informal approach might be acceptable, especially if you have had a verbal discussion first.
- Short-Term or Temporary types of Positions: For short-term or temporary roles, a less formal resignation might be sufficient if it aligns with the nature of the position.
